Code of Student Responsibilities and Ethical Behavior

Dunlap-Stone's University Code of Student Responsibilities and Ethical Behavior is important in the overall educational experience. It is expected that students recognize and follow the this code when involved in the virtual classroom experience.

- ? Acknowledge and respect ones self, other students, faculty and staff.
- ? Maintain confidentiality about information revealed during a course by other students and faculty.
- ? Show respect for students, faculty and staff regardless of their origin, gender, ethnicity, religious or political beliefs.
- ? Accept the responsibility for ones own actions when communicating verbally and in written format.
- ? Acknowledge sources of information when submitting written assignments.
- ? Show the ability to work in a self-reliant manner when completing assignment within the context of individual assignments and group assignments.
- ? Harassment, sexual or otherwise, that creates a hostile or offensive "classroom" environment will be cause for dismissal from the class and possible suspension from future courses at the Institute.
- ? Plagiarism by a student in regard to a written assignment is taken very seriously and may result in dismissal from class, failing course grade and possible suspension from future courses at the Institute.

Suspected code violations must be submitted in writing as s Scholastic Grievance to the appropriate Student Conflicts Consortium Board. Please contact DSU's Administration for information regarding such reports. After research and review by the Ethics Committee, a final decision will be issued.
